THE LEGISLATURE.

But one day remains of the session 1883 of the Legislature of West Virginia. Yesterday's sessions, in both houses, were short but very busy ones. Both houses met at 9:30 a. M. The Senate Bribery Investigation Committee made its report, cerning the incorporation of joint stock companies without special charters, was passed. This bill changes the law in re-gard to building associations so that money can be loaned not only for building and re-pairing houses, as heretofore, but for any its passage.

The committee appointed to investigate

He also told Senator McGrew about it, and Senator McGrew afterwards told Senator Floyd that an attempt had been made to use money to influence a vote for the bill. The committee were satisfied that Mr. Mason made the offer without any attempt to exert corrupt in-fluence upon the Senator, yet they deemed it proper to say that they deemed the offer very improper in itself and of an evil tend-ency.

The bill concerning legal fences was taken up, the amendment proposed by the Senate agreed to and the bill again passed.

A large number of bills on their second reading were disposed of. Among these was the bill to change the law so that the sentence of a convicted felos shall be assessed by the jury instead of the judge. This bill Mr. Armstrong moved to indefinitely postpone, but the House, after a warm discussion, cut short by ordering the previous question, refused to take this action, and the bill was ordered to its third reading. lucation, reliased to take the action, and the bill was ordered to its third reading. House bill No. 212, to empower the County Court of Hampshire county to compromise a claim against the Baltimore & Ohio railroad company for back taxes,

There were also a few negroes in our locality, who were successful farmers, and these Brown always took a great deal of interest in. He would question them, make their children read to him, and examine their methods of farming with much interest. He was in the nabit of stopping with old Judge McKeever, of West Middleton an original Abolitionist, and a very intellectual man. They would talk far into the night on the negro problem. Both agreed upon the enormity of the crime of slavery, but they were divided upon the means of its extermination. Brown was in favor of precipitating matters, arming the negroes, and by a general uprising throughout the South accomplish their freedom. McKeever, more conservative, wanted to temporize, as he thought the signs of the times indicated the extinction of the institution. Brown used to consult with Dr. LeMoyne, of Washington, and Dr. McKeehan, of West Alexander. Dr. LeMoyne got some of his best agricultural ideas from Brown, and Alexander. Congressman Ochiltree is a fruitful source of the best stories that are told in and out of Congress. Recently, when he and the puglist Mace were both staying at the St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans, he remarked to a friend that the "slugger" did not look to be a very quick man, and finally made a bet of a basket of wine that he could give him a blow and escape punishment by inhim a blow and escape punishment by in stantly apologizing, before the fighter had stantly apologizing, before the fighter had time to put up his fists. Accordingly, Ochiltree approached the champion of the ring, and without a word struck him on the nose with his open hand. But, before he could open his mouth to utter the apology, the bystanders saw a vision of a flery red head and mustache, and a nice new dress suit presumed to inclose the figure of a man, knocked from the end of the bar through the folding doors out on the sidewalk. Ochiltree was at once picked up and repaired by his friends. Then they assisted him into Mace's presence, and he explained that he had tapped that worthy's nose merely to carry out a wager, and said he was sorry—which was quite evident. "Then that's ball right," quoth-Mace, turning to the crowd; "and I'm glad hi didn't 'it' im 'ard."
